

Canyoning Reflection
By: Ben Riehl

This field trip was the best ever! I had to think and choose different routes. I had to think these questions: "is this a safe route?", "Is this an exiting route?" and, "Is this a fitting route for me?". Some things I learned from this trip is that you should not climb high because you can have chances to not find a way back down. Also, you should not climb on wet mossy rocks because will slip and hurt you self. I slipped into the water with my entire body 3 times because I stepped on mossy rocks under water. I landed in the water so I did not hurt myself. I actually enjoyed the slipping. I felt very exited because I have never done this before. During the climbing, I really really really felt confident. At the end, I was wet like a water buffalo and stank like rotten fish. So cool! I don't think there were any bad things. The only difficult things were to climb up to high walls if it was the only route. Once, I just happened to find a new one! Every thing I learned will stay in my memory for a long time. Perhaps I will have to use these skills again another day! Everything I learned will probably be used again for learning.
